EWMARK followed the thirtythree days' work of the log drive with great interest. Gradually the men got used to him and ceased to treat him as an outsider, The drive went down as far as Redding in thirty-three days. The men worked fourteen and sixteen hours at times. Several bad jams relieved the monotony. Problems of mechanics arose to be solved on the spot. Orde solved them by a rough and ready rule of thumb. He built structures which would have furnished a winter's discussion to some committees, just as the loggers had built through a rough country hundreds of miles of road better than railroad grade and smooth as a turnpike, the quarter of which would have occupied the average county board of supervisors for five years.

The drive was to be delivered at the booms of Morrison and Daly above the city of Redding, a thriving place of long rapids forty miles from Lake

The last camp was made six or eight miles above the mill. A good proportion of the rivermen, eager for the town, tramped down the road, to return early in the morning more or less drunk. One or two did not return.

Among the revelers was the cook, Charlie, commonly called "the doctor," and he moped about disconsolately. In the evening he looked so much like a chicken with the pip that Orde's attention was attracted. "Got that dark brown taste, Charlie?"

he inquired, with meck solicitude. "I tell you I only had two glasses of beer!" cried Charlie, goaded.

Then why this joyless demeanor? begged Orde. Charle grumbled fiercely inarticulate, but Johnny Challan interposed with a chuckle of enjoyment. "He got 'bunked."

"Tell us!" cried Orde delightedly. "It was down at McNeill's place," explained Johnny Challan. "They was couple of sports there who throwed out three cards back up on the table

They showed you where the jack was before they throwed, and it surely looked like a picnic, but it wasn't." "Three card monte," said Newmark.

"How much?" asked Simms. "About $50," replied the boy.

Orde turned on the disgruntled cook. "And you had fifty in your turkey camping with this outfit of hard citi zens!" he cried. "You ought to lose

Johnny Challan was explaining to his companions exactly how the game At this point Newmark broke into

'Have you a pack of cards?" he ask ed in his dry, incisive manner. An old deck was produced.

Newmark cleared a cracker box of dreing socks and drew it to him. "These three are the cards," he said, spenking rapidly. "There is the jack of hearts. I pass my hands-so. Pick the jack, one of you," he challenged. "Any of you," he urged. "You, North." The foreman leaned forward and rather besitaringly laid a blunt forefinger on one of the cards. It was the ten of spades. "Let me try," interposed Tim Nolan, "I bet I can pick "Oh, yes, you bet!" shrugged New-nark. "And that's where the card sharps get you fellows every time."

He deftly flipped the cards. Nolan, who had watched keenly, indicated one without besitation. Again it proved to be the ten of spades.

Everybody was ambitious, and the man, with inexbaustible pathrew out the cards, the corners of his mouth twitching sardonically at each wrong guess. At length he called a hait. "By this time I'd have had all your money." he pointed "Now I'll pick the jack." He made his swift passes and distributed the cards. Then, quite calmly, without disturbing the three on the cracker box, he held up the jack of hearts. An exclamation broke from the group. Nolan leaned forward and turned over the three on the board. They were the eight of diamonds and two

But you showed us the jack every

"Where'd you get on to doing all that, Newmark?" inquired North. "You ain't a tin horn yourself?"

Newmark laughed briefly. "Not I," said be. "I learned a lot of those tricks from a traveling magician in college.

Orde had sat well in the background, watching intently all that was going on. After the exclamations following the exposure had subsided, he

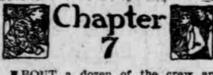

"Boys," said he, "how game are you to get Charlie's money back-and then "Try us," returned big Tim.

"This game's at McNeill's, and Mc-Neill's is a tough bole," warned Orde. Maybe everything will go penceful, and maybe not. And you boys that go with me have got to keep sober. There isn't going to be any row unless I say so, and I'm not taking any contract to handle a lot of drunken river hogs as well as go against a game." The thirty men of the rear crew signified their intention to stay by the

"You can't make those sharps dis gorge," counseled Newmark, "At the first look of trouble they will light about 30,000 inhabitants situated on a out. They have it all fixed. Force won't do you much good and may get some of you shot."

"I'm not going to use force," denied Orde. "I'm just going to play their game. But I bet I can make it go."

peared in the evening to go with Orde. They set out up the long reach of Water street, their steel calks biting deep into the pitted board walks.

For nearly a mile the street was flanked solely by lumber yards, small mills and factories. Then came a strip of unimproved land, followed immediately by the wooden, ramshackle structures of Hell's Half Mile. As yet the season was too early for much joy along Hell's Half Mile. Orde's little crew and the forty or fifty men of the drive that had preceded him constituted the rank and file at that moment in town. A little later, when all the drives on the river should be in and those of its tributaries and the men still lingering at the woods camps, at least 500 woods weary men would be turned loose. Then Hell's Half Mile would awaken in earnest from earnest from its hibernation. The lights would blaze from day to day. From its open windows would blare the music. the cries of men and women, the shuffle of feet, the poise of fighting, the shricks of wild laughter, curses deep and frank and unashamed, songs broken and interrupted. Crews of men, arms locked, would surge up and down the narrow sidewalks, their little felt hats cocked one side, their heads back, their fearless eyes challenging the devil and all his works-and getting the challenge accepted. Girls would fit across the lit windows like shadows before flames or stand in the doorways hailing the men joyially by name.

Tonight, however, the street was comparatively quiet. The saloons were of modified illumination. The barkeepers were listlessly wiping the bars. "pretty waiter girls" gossiped with each other and yawned behind their hands. In the middle of the third block Orde wheeled sharp to the left down a dark and dangerous looking alley: Another turn to the right brought him into a very narrow street where stood a three story wooden structure into which led a high arched entrance. This was McNeill's.

A figure detached itself from the shadow. Orde uttered an exclama-

"You here, Newmark?" he cried. "Yes," replied that young man. "I want to see this through."

"With those clothes?" marveled Orde, "It's a wonder some of these thugs haven't held you up long ago It's dangerous. You're likely to get slugged. "I can stand it if you can," returned Newmark.

McNeill's lower story was given over entirely to drinking. The second floor was a theater and the third a dance hall. Beneath the building were still viler depths. From this basement the riverman and the shanty boy generally graduated penniless and perhaps unconscious to the street. Now, your lumberiack did not customarily arrive at this stage without lively doings en route; therefore McNeill's maintained a force of fighters. They were burly, sodden men, but strong in their experience and their discipline. To be sure, they might not last quite as long as their antagonists could, but they always lasted plenty long enough Sand bags and brass knuckles helped some and team work finished the job. Orde and his men entered the lower hall as though sauntering in without definite aim. The river boss wandered

"You've got the best eye that's been in this place since I got here," exclaimed the dealer. "Here, Dennis," said be to his partner. "You try him." Dennis obligingly took the cards and lost. By this time the men, augmented by the idlers, had drawn close, Whether it was that the gamblers sensed the fact that Orde might be led to plunge or whether they were using him to draw the crowd into their game it would be difficult to say, but twice more they permitted him to win.

Newmark plucked his sleeve. "You're $20 ahead," he muttered.

Tame Deer in Wilton. Last June as Mr. Moriarty of Wilton was going through the woods back of he reservoir he found a fawn, ex-nausted and almost ready to die. Its nother had evidently been chased by logs and had outran the fawn. Mr. Moriarty carried the fawn over to his sister's, Mrs. Thomas Nolan, who took it into the house and fed it on warm milk. The deer has now become do-mesticated and frisks and plays around with the members of the family r it is startled it will run to Mrs. Nolan.

The New Woman

is one who enjoys perfect health, who is capable of doing her work, whether at the loom or in the kitchen, in the counting-house or taking her part at a social event, with unimpaired vim and vigor. That's the kind of women the nation needs.

Unfortunately, many women are physical wrecks, constantly under the cloud of ill-health, often the victims of high-strung nerves. The cause is not hard to find. Errors of diet, haste in eating, lack of exercise and inattention to certain bodily functions, all play their part. Once the germ of disease finds its lodgment, if left to do its work, it will quickly undermine the entire fabric of bodily tissue. Prevention is better than cure. Whoever has used Beecham's Pills

Appreciates the Effectiveness of their action. As a preventive they are wonderful, as a cure equally marvelous and efficient. Women should know of this remarkable remedy. For sick headache, nervousness, irregularities from whatever cause, debility and a host of other feminine ailments there is no better nor safer medicine. At the first symptom of pain or trouble, rout the enemy and put yourself on a pedestal of perfect health by using
